that sacred purpose she seemed to be forgetting. Her father drew her with him into the vortex, hiding from her that he embarked in it principally for her sake, and she went down the current with him out of illial duty. CHAPTER LVI. Up to this time Helen's sex, and its Up to this time Helen's sex, and its attributes, had been a great disadvantage to her. She had been stopped on the very threshold of her inquiry by petty difficulties, which a man would have soon surmounted. But one fine day the scale gave a little turn, and she made a little discovery, thanks to her sex. Women, whether it is that they are born to be followed, or are accustomed to be followed, seem to have eyes in the backs of her heads, and instinct to divine when somebody is after them. This inexperienced girl, who had missed seeing many things our readers have seen, observed in who had missed seeing many things our readers have seen, observed in merely passing her window a seedy man in the court yard of the hotel. Would you believe it, she instantly recognized the man who had opened her cab-door for her in Lincoln's Inn Eiglds Onick as lightly hereals in the court yard of the hotel. FAMILY DEVOTIONS.

Robert Penfold, it may be remembered, had mentioned an may be remembered, had mentioned an expert as one of the persons she was to see. She had looked for his name in the Directory, but experts were not down in the book. Another fatality! But at last she had found Undercliff, a lithographer, and she fancied that must be the same person. She did not hope to learn much from him; the newspapers said his evidence had caused a smile. She had a distinct object in visiting him, the nature of which will appear. She ordered a cab, and dressed appear. She ordered a cab, and dressed perself. She came down, and appeared herself. She came down, and entered the cab; but, instead of telling the man where to drive, she gave him a slip of paper, containing the address of the paper, containing the advess of the lithographer. 'Drive there,' said she, a little mysteriously. The cabman winked, suspecting an intrigue, and went off to the place. There she learned Mr. Underclift had moved to Frith street, Soho, number not known. She told the cabman to drive slowly up and down the street. but could not find the name. At last she observed some lithographs in a window. She let the cabman go all down the street, then stopped him, and paid him off. She had no ped him, and paid him off. She had no sooner done this than she walked very briskly back, and entered the little shop, and inquired for Mr. Undercliff. He was out, and not expected back for an hour. 'I will wait,' said Helen; and she sat down with her head upon her white hand. A seedy man passed the window rapidly with a busy air; and, if his eye shot a glance into the shop, it was so light and careless nobody was so light and careless nobody would suspect he was a spy, and had done his work effectually as he ilashed by. In that moment the young lady, through the chink of her fingers, which she had opened for that purpose, not only recognized the man, but noticed his face, his hat, his waistcoat, his dirty inen, and the pin in his neck-tie. 'Ah!' said she, and flushed to the Ah!' said she, and flushed to the brow.

She lifted up her head and became conscious of a formidable old woman, who was standing behind the counter at a side door, eyeing her with the severest scrutiny. This old woman was tall and thin, and had a fine face, the lower part of which was feminine enough; but the forehead and brows were also min. Though her hair was were alarming. Though her hair was silvery, the brows were black and shag-gy, and the forehead was divided by a vertical furrow into two temples. Unvertical furrow into two temples. Under those shaggy eyebrows shone dark-grey eyes, that passed for black with most people; and those eyes were fixed on Helen, reading her. Helen's lighthazle eyes turned their gaze. She blushed, and, still looking, said, 'Pray, madam, can I see Mr. Uundercliff?'
'My son is out for the day, Miss,' said the old lady, civilly.
'O, dear! how unfortunate I am!' said Helen with a sigh.
'He comes back to-night. You can see him to-morrow at ten o'clock. A question of handwriting?'

Some considerable time ago Mr. John Ervin, grocer, of Wellsburg, remitted to his banker in New York, coupons to a considerable amount for collection, but they failed to reach their destination, and after much inquiry and correspondence they were given up as lost or stolen. One day this week, a New York detective returned Mr. Ervin his money, amounting to some $300. It appears that the coupons, together with other valuables to a large amount, had been embezzled by a clerk in the New York Postoffice, which the authorities getting wind of in some way, succeeded in recovering. "O, dear! how unfortunate I am!" said Helen with a sigh.

'He comes back to-night. You can see him to-morrow at ten o'clock. A question of handwriting?'

'Not exactly,' said Helen; 'but he was witness in favor of a person, I know was innocent.'

'But he was found guilty,' said the other with keenness.'

So also there are two ways of going to hell: one is to walk into it with your eyes open—few people do that—the other is to go down by the steps of little sins, and that way I fear, Is only too common. Put up with a few little sins, and you will soon want a few more; even a heathen could say, "Whoever was content with only one sin?" and your course will be regularly worse and worse every year. Well did Jeremy Taylor describe the progress of sin in a man: "First it startles him, then it becomes pleasing, then easy, then delightful, then frequent, then habitual, then confirmed. Then the man is impenitent, then obstinate, and then damned." Reader! the devil only wants to get the wedge of a little allowed sin lato your heart, and you will soon be all his own. It seems advisable, while on this subject, to characterize as wholly unfounded the paragraph going the rounds of the newspapers which says that it is customary the President elect to allow the Vice President elect to allow the Vice President elect to name one member of the dent elect to name one member of the Cabinet, and that Colfax has according-ly selected Superintendent Defrees, of the Government printing office. There never has been such a custom, the Vice President having no voice whatever in Cabinet-making. The relations between General Grant and Mr. Colfax are extremely cordial, and the General has probably talked with his associate about Cabinet matters, but Mr. Colfax is known to hold that the selection of confidential advisers is peculiarly the President's affair, and he has neither urged nor asked the appointment of anybody. It largely concerns men's relations to one another; and a cheerful observance of the higher order of human obligations is truly a good thing, in a social sense, and probably not at all displeasing to the Ruler of the universe. Besides, in a busy, hard-working community like ours, if people are not to wear their fine M. REILLY. clothes on Sunday, when are they to wear them?—or, where is the good of getting them at all? NATIONAL LIFE INSURANCE CO UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

WASHINGTON, D. C. Chartered by Special Act of Congress

Cash Capital, - - $1,000,000, PAID IN FULL. BRANCH OFFICE: FIRST NATIONAL BANK BUILDING, PHILADELPHIA.

Where the general business of the Compan s transacted, and to which all general co OFFICERS: CLARENCE H. CLARK, President AY COOKE, Chairman Finance and Executive Committee

EMERSON W. PEET, Secretary and Actu

HENRY D. COOKE, Vice-President.

This Company, National in its character, offers, by reason of its Large Capital, Low Rates of Premium and New Tables, the most desirable means of insuring life yet presented to the public.

The rates of premium, being largely reduced, are made as favorable to the insurers as those of the best Mutual Companies, and avoid all the complications and uncertainties of Notes, Dividends and the misunderstandings which the latter are so apt to cause the Policy-Holder.

Several new and attractive tables are now presented which need only to be understood to prove acceptable to the public, such as the INCOME-PRODUCING POLICY and KK-TURN PREMIOM POLICY. In the former the policy-holder not only secures a life insurance, payable at death, but will receive, if living, aiter a period of a few years, an enmusi income equal to ten per cent (10 per cent) of the par of his policy. In the latter the company agrees to return to the assured the total amount of money he has paid in, in addition to the amount of his policy.

The attention of persons contemplating insuring their lives or increasing the amount of insurance they already have, is called to the special advantages offered by the National Life Insurance Company.
